Help Stop Thievery:

Thefts have been on the rise lately in all the college buildings. Purses have been snatched and equipment has been stolen; the losses have been considerable. Despite ever-increasing sums spent and efforts made by us and every neighboring institution to tighten security, the entire area has been plagued by thefts. The thieves are adept and experienced; they often take advantage of even a few seconds' carelessness to "liberate" items. Since City aid for this problem is minimal, we must fall back on our own individual and collective resources to combat crime. Here's how everyone can help:

- - Do not carry large sums of cash.
- - Never leave handbags and other valuable personal items unattended, even for a moment.
- - Keep portable equipment in sight or under lock and key at all times.

Dean of Administration

Who's Doing What:

Lila Chalpin (English) was interviewed, and her prose and poetry works read aloud, on "Books and the World," a weekly program on cable television Channel 11.

George Greenamyer (3-D) has received one of twenty $5,000 grants given by the Louis Comfort Tiffany Foundation each year. His work was selected in a national competition in which 2,167 painters and sculptors participated.

The jurors were Romare Beardon, Marcia Tucker, Ethel Edwards, Harvey Arneson, and the trustees of the Tiffany Foundation.

Howard Danielowitz, who teaches Film Animation in the Continuing Education program, recently had his film "Fields" exhibited at the 1977 New York Film Festival.

A MassArt alumna and a former faculty member have received two of eight $3,500 Artists Fellowships awarded this Fall by the Massachusetts Arts and Humanities Foundation. Ros Barron (Video) and Holly Fisher (film) were selected from among 129 applicants in the film and video categories. A public screening of the Fellows' work is being planned.

Elaine Ostroff, Director of the Arts & Human Services Project in Art Education, participated in an international consultation in Malta, in November, planning with representatives of other countries for the United Nations International Year of the Child in 1979. This consultation focused on the child's right to play and developed an initial statement for the United Nations agencies and their commissions for each country. The statement recommends strategies that keep the needs of children in mind in environmental planning as well as in health, education, welfare, and leisure programs.

She has also been meeting in Washington as a member of the Presidents Commission on Mental Health, Task Force Panel on the Arts and Mental Health. That group is preparing a report that documents how artists and designers are involved in human service and education programs and makes recommendations on planning and funding to increase that participation.
